INTRODUCTION

HIV Prevention Services for Immigrants: A Referral Resource Directory of New York City Agencies was developed through a multi-tiered process involving New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) staff, Prevention Planning Group (PPG) Immigrant Workgroup members, additional key informants and contacts, and an extensive materials and literature review. These resources and the Immigrant Workgroup and Focus Group members provided guidance for Directory format, and identified agencies, information and services that are included in the Resource Directory to best assist NYC service providers. The main goal of the Resource Directory is to improve access to and availability of HIV prevention services for immigrants, through the development of a list of HIV prevention and care providers with programs specifically targeted to immigrant populations within NYC.

ECQ Group, Inc. reviewed over 300 community-based organizations for inclusion in the Directory, and found approximately 200 that provide HIV prevention related services for immigrants. ECQ Group, Inc. developed a survey tool, based on participant input, and contacted agencies by e-mail and telephone to complete the survey.

Participants also identified additional supportive services that are included towards the back of the Directory. These services include Needle Exchange sites, AIDS Community Service Providers (CSPs), additional hotline numbers and advocacy, policy and training agencies.

There are many other Referral Resource Directories available which may also be of assistance in providing services to immigrant patients and clients. These include:

- Bedford Stuyvesant/Crown Heights Coalition on Research and Planning Resource Directory.
- Bronx HIV Care Networks' Resource Directory of HIV/AIDS Community Services. Spring 2002.
- Community Coalition Project of Central Brooklyn Resource Guide. The Miracle Makers, Inc. Lead Agency.
- Directory of New York Area African Immigrant Associations, March 2003.
- Directory of Services to Immigrants: A Guide to Community-Based Organizations in New York City. New York City Mayor's Office of Immigrant Affairs and Language Services.
- New York Academy of Medicine Library, www.aidsnyc.org on-line directory of AIDS Service Providers.
- New York City HIV Prevention Program Service Directory. Summer 2004
- Queens HIV Care Network Service Delivery Plan 2002 Resource Directory
- Rainbo.org, African CBO Network in NY
- Resource Directory for South Asian Health and Human Services in New York and New Jersey. South Asian Health Project.
- Williamsburg Greenpoint Bushwick HIV Care Network Resource Directory 2004.

If you have corrections to the Directory, or would like to access the most current version, please contact the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene Prevention Planning Unit at (212) 788-4180, or at dohmhppg@health.nyc.gov.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Heartfelt thanks to the members of the New York City Prevention Planning Group's Immigrant Workgroup who attended the advisory meetings and focus group and shared their expertise providing guidance to the development of this document. Special thanks also to the additional members of the immigrant communities who also attended the focus group, and the individuals who gave so graciously of their time as key informant interviews. The staff of the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene's Prevention Planning Unit made this document possible through their guidance, and assistance with coordinating meetings and correspondence. Last, and certainly not least, it is the individuals who responded to the surveys and phone calls, providing information for inclusion in the Resource Directory that truly made this possible.

HIV Prevention Services for Immigrants: A Referral Resource Directory of New York City Agencies was prepared for the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene by the ECQ Group, Inc. through the work of Elizabeth Levine, MA, MPH, Executive Director, ECQ Group, Inc., Janet Goldberg, MPH, and Rosalie Sanchez, MA. We would also like to express our gratitude for the abilities and persistence of the ECQ Group staff, including Cheryl Martin, Program Coordinator, Cecelia Cocas, Program Assistant, and Patricia Vasquez, Research Assistant.

AIDS Community Service Providers

Community Service Providers (CSPs) provide a continuum of services to meet both the HIV prevention and support service needs of people who are affected by and infected with HIV/AIDS. The services provided by CSPs include outreach to communities most at risk of infection; HIV prevention and advanced risk reduction education; case management including COBRA case management; support services including client education, transportation, support groups, counseling, buddy volunteers, legal advocacy; services to affected family members including bereavement counseling and support groups; and referral to services not directly provided by the CSP. Some CSPs provide treatment adherence support.

New York, NY 10018
(212) 594-7741
www.cicatelli.org

Cicatelli Associates assists organizations to strengthen their services and enhance the work environment by providing management consulting, training, and technical assistance. They also oversee the following immigrant projects and HIV peer training programs:

New York Linking Information Networking Knowledge (NY LINK) is a technology transfer and resource exchange project that joins together people living with HIV/AIDS (PLWHA) and health care providers from the Caribbean, Central America, Mexico, and New York City. So far over 200 representatives from 18 countries have participated in the NY LINK, working together with U.S.-based counterparts to share and develop HIV/AIDS programmatic strategies on risk reduction and behavior change, HIV counseling and testing, leadership development of PLWHA, treatment and adherence, and the development and maintenance of multidisciplinary teams to implement these programs. For further information, contact Cicatelli Associates at: (212) 594-7741, or at their website: www.cicatelli.org.

Leadership Training Institute The New York City and New York State People Living with HIV & AIDS Leadership Training Institute (PWA LTI) is a statewide initiative that provides training, skills building, motivation, and education to people living with HIV and AIDS (PWHA), to support the development of involved and effective HIV-positive community leaders. Training topics include community organizing, planning and decision making,

The New York City Gay & Lesbian Anti-Violence Project (AVP) serves lesbian, gay, transgender, bisexual and HIV-positive victims of violence, and others affected by violence, by providing free and confidential services enabling them to regain their sense of control, identify and evaluate their options, and assert their rights. In particular, AVP's staff and volunteers assist survivors of hate-motivated violence (including HIV-motivated violence), domestic violence, and sexual assault, by providing therapeutic counseling and advocacy within the criminal justice system and victim support agencies, information for self-help, referrals to practicing professionals, and other sources of assistance. AVP provides free and confidential assistance to thousands of crime victims each year from all five boroughs of New York City. The agency maintains a 24-hour crisis intervention hotline staffed by professional counselors and trained volunteers, provides professional and peer support counseling as well as police, court and social service advocacy and conducts training programs for law enforcement, victim service providers and hospital personnel.

AVP serves the larger community through efforts to educate the public about violence directed at or within our communities and to reform government policies and practices affecting lesbian, gay, transgender, bisexual, HIV-positive and other survivors of violence. AVP works to change public attitudes that tolerate, insulate or instigate hate-motivated violence, and to promote public policies designed to deter such violence.

The New York Immigration Coalition (NYIC) is an umbrella policy and advocacy organization for approximately 150 groups in New York State that work with immigrants and refugees. As the coordinating body for organizations that serve one of the largest and most diverse newcomer populations in the United States, the NYIC has become a leading advocate for immigrant communities on the local, state and national levels. The NYIC's membership includes grassroots community organizations, not-for-profit health and human services organizations, religious and academic institutions, labor unions, and legal, social and economic justice organizations. With its multi-ethnic, multi-racial and multi-sector base, the NYIC provides both a forum for immigrant groups to share their concerns and vehicles for collective action to address these concerns.

Immigrant and HIV Agencies: Advocacy, Policy and Training

The NYIC was founded in 1987 to mobilize the leadership of New York's immigrant communities in response to the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. It has since evolved into a powerful advocacy voice, analyzing the impact of immigration policy proposals, promoting and protecting the rights of immigrants and their family members, improving newcomers' access to services, resolving problems with public agencies and mobilizing member groups to respond to emerging issues and needs. Services include policy analysis and advocacy, civic participation and voter education, community education materials, and the Immigrant Concerns Training Institute.

NEW YORK IMMIGRATION HOTLINE (INFORMATION AND REFERRAL)

(212) 419-3737

Hotline: (800) 566-7636

The New York Immigration Hotline provides general information about immigration law, and referrals to non-profit agencies for immigration services. Services are available in seventeen languages.

25 THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MAKE YOUR ORGANIZATION IMMIGRANT – FRIENDLY¹

HIV/AIDS service providers like to think their services are open to everyone and that they do not discriminate. But, without intending to exclude anyone, sometimes the failure to understand how different communities view an agency and its services amounts to de facto discrimination. The purpose of this part is to offer some tips on how to make your service program more accommodating to the needs of immigrants. This is not meant to be an all-inclusive listing, and each point does not apply to all immigrants. This information comes from the observations and tips of immigrants and immigrant advocates.

1. Become aware of your own "immigraphobia"! One of the greatest obstacles to serving immigrants is our own immigraphobia, or dislike of immigrants. Inside most of us is some level of hostility to the needs of immigrants as job takers, unfair competition and/or people who are “foreign.” Despite facts that show that immigrants contribute more to the economy than they receive and without regard to the common humanity we all share, immigraphobia continues to spread. AIDS service organizations have not escaped this prejudice. Advocates and immigrants regularly hear some version of the following complaint:

“These people come to this country and take services from those Americans that are in need. There are so few resources for AIDS to go around for people who are citizens, these immigrants should be grateful for what they get rather than complaining.”

While, sometimes, these words are spoken directly to the immigrant, most often they go unsaid and are manifested by non-cooperative attitudes. For organizations which have chosen to address immigraphobia internally, the use of awareness education has proven successful. While everyone has their personal views on immigration policy, the treatment of immigrants should always be respectful.

2. Recognize that every immigrant is a distinct individual. Conclusions about people that are based on their looks, speech, dress and mannerisms form the basis for countless interactions everyday. With respect to immigrants, most of our preconceptions are wrong. Set out below is a list of variables at work that may help to highlight the individuality of each immigrant:

- X Recent immigrants have distinct needs that are different from long-term immigrants. Studies have shown that the length of time an immigrant has been residing in the United States dictates the kinds of services (s)he might need. More recent immigrants have the most serious difficulty connecting to needed services because of the difficulty in obtaining employment, the lack of a social services safety net, language isolation, etc. The longer an immigrant is here the more (s)he is likely to be connected to services and social support networks.

- X Some immigrants are committed to becoming American citizens while others are unable to do so. Some immigrants desperately want to become citizens of the United States but are ineligible for naturalization. Others choose not to naturalize for various reasons. There are immigrants with HIV who remain in this country only because they know that returning to their home country would be a death sentence because of the lack of medication availability. Many immigrants remain without status or employment authorization and are constantly worried about deportation.
- X Economic class and education levels differ widely among and within immigrant communities. Just like citizens, immigrants represent every economic and educational background. Some immigrants are functionally illiterate, while others are medical doctors or lawyers trained in their home countries. Some immigrants grew up in middle-class environments while others lived in abject poverty.
- X Immigrants come to the United States for all kinds of reasons. Some immigrants come for economic reasons, while others are here to be with other family members who have immigrated. There are immigrants who are seeking asylum from persecution because of their political beliefs or sexual orientation, while others are seeking a new life and economic or professional advancement.

3. Learn all you can about the immigrants in your community. An important first step in creating an immigrant-friendly workplace is to understand the immigrant groups in your service area. Get to know the communities in your community. The best place to start is to ask a few immigrants about their population, or, as the Latino Commission has found, speaking with ministers in local churches with large immigrant populations. Another resource for demographic information is your local Planning Department. However you proceed, you want to learn where people socialize (that is, where their social clubs, bars, churches and community centers are), about the diversity within their communities (different dialects and regions) and about their critical social institutions.

4. Develop linkages with immigrant organizations in your area for legal and other referrals. Many providers have difficulty in serving immigrants because they do not know where to go for help with questions about legal and home-country issues. Immigrant and legal organizations in your area provide an invaluable link for outreach and referrals on a broad range of non-HIV-related services. By identifying formal linkages with immigrant associations, your organization will better serve your immigrant clients and also provide support to your staff.

5. Ask immigrants only for the information you need. When an immigrant walks through the door of a social service agency, (s)he is taking an enormous step. Unlike other potential clients, many immigrants have a deep fear of “official” organizations, which they perceive as having a tie to government. Concepts such as confidentiality may be completely unknown in their home countries. If there is no specific legislative restriction on a particular service, there really is no need to ask questions that will be seen by immigrants as proxies for asking about their immigrant status. Be very sure that the information is absolutely required by calling such organizations as the Legal Department of the Gay Men's Health Crisis, the HIV Law

Project or the Latino Commission. Only ask questions that are necessary. Questions that are often not necessary and can raise anxiety for immigrants include:

- X What is your social security number? To have a social security number means that you are in the United States with permission from the United States Government. Many immigrants do not have such a number and view such a question as code for “Are you legal?”
- X How long have you been in this Country? Questions about how long an immigrant has been in the country are seen as shorthand for asking about his or her naturalization status.
- X Why did you come to the United States? Questions about motive have no place in initial interviews with immigrants. Information about what drove an immigrant to leave family and friends is very personal.
- X What is your immigrant status? If you have no need for this information, there is no reason to ask for it. It will turn immigrants away from needed services.

6. Ask immigrants for necessary information at an appropriate time. - If you must ask for information that indirectly or directly probes immigrant status (i.e., social security number), it is sometimes helpful to wait until after the basic screening interview. Immigrant status is sometimes complicated, and you will elicit more accurate information from the immigrant if you first establish a basis for trust. Sometimes completing all the needed screening steps before asking for sensitive immigration information will bring a better result. Remember that your first priority is determining the immigrant’s needs and then establishing what you can do for them.

7. Do not badger immigrants for information they do not have. If you ask for a social security number and the person says that (s)he does not have one, do not continue to press him or her further. Once an immigrant has told you directly or indirectly that (s)he is not on Medicaid or that (s)he lacks identifying information available to legal immigrants, do not continue to press the point. Do not ruin the trust relationship you have built up by causing further embarrassment.

8. Never assume that an immigrant understands confidentiality. While most of us have specific expectations of confidentiality, for many immigrants the concept of confidentiality of medical records or information is new. In their home countries, there may be little confidence in the willingness or ability of local health providers and social service agencies to keep information private. With this kind of experience, it is important to take the time to explain the procedures your agency or institution follows in protecting individuals’ information.

9. Display your receptiveness to different cultures. Many immigrants have reported that they do not feel welcome in many agencies because their culture is not reflected there. They want to feel more connected to an institution that displays cultural awareness and which acknowledges their cultural background. The starting point for addressing the problem is to acknowledge that your workplace reflects the cultural background of the clients served. When you examine the key points of entry to the agency, ask yourself what is being communicated to clients and visitors. If you want to make the first contact more inviting to persons of different cultures, consider adding some elements like decorative arts and cultural symbols from the particular immigrant groups you are trying to reach.

10. Adequate language services are critical in reaching and providing services to immigrants. Despite the widely acknowledged need to provide services in the client's primary language, many organizations still fall far short in meeting this minimal threshold for services. Problems seem to occur when organizations fail to conduct a basic assessment of their language services needs. A well-defined language services assessment will highlight the critical program areas where foreign language-speaking staff should be assigned. If no professional staff is available, a language service plan would identify staff assigned to other areas who could translate or when such helpers as AT&T's Language Line could be used. There is no substitute for hiring trained staff members that speak the language of the program's target populations. To have any hope of reaching immigrants you need to do more than simply offer translations.

11. Do not become exasperated with limited English speakers. Many immigrants work very hard to learn English. Despite their anxiety about speaking English, they often want to make the effort. This can impose a burden on the service provider to understand words that are mispronounced or entirely wrong. Some immigrants report that service providers sometimes become exasperated and even rude when they try to speak English. To avoid the problem, the provider should make a decision as to whether (s)he can, in fact, understand what the client is saying. If not, (s)he should ask politely whether the person would prefer to meet with a native-language speaker to address his or her problems. On the other hand, the provider may decide (s)he has the patience to work with the immigrant and that (s)he is getting accurate information. In this case, the provider is both assisting in developing the self-esteem of a client and in meeting programmatic objectives.

12. Do not assume that immigrants understand what your organization does and the services it has to offer. In many countries, the non-profit system is closely tied to the government, and access to services is dependent on who one's family knows. In other countries, there is no not-for-profit infrastructure and the government provides most of the social services. Because of these varied backgrounds, a provider should never assume that an immigrant client understands what the agency does and its relationship to government. It is better to spend a few minutes with immigrant participants (both in prevention and treatment-related work) explaining the organization, the services it provides and the relationship it has with government. Clarity in the beginning of the relationship will result in better cooperation and more successful interventions.

13. Staff from immigrant communities can be the best form of outreach. One of the most effective tools in recruiting and retaining immigrant clients, and for outreach, is to employ immigrants to assist in developing the program and doing the work. While the immigrant worker should, ideally, come from the same economic and cultural background as prospective clients, an immigrant staff member who is familiar with that segment of society from his or her home country can be a tremendous help.

14. Never make an immigrant feel stupid or like a child. Sometimes when non-immigrants talk to immigrants, a mental age discrepancy gets created. The non-immigrant begins to speak louder and in short words as though the immigrant is deaf and unable to understand English. If the immigrant is deaf, speaking louder will not bridge that barrier. If the immigrant is unable to understand English, speaking in short words may help, but finding a native speaker is probably more effective. Taken together, these behaviors and others serve to infantilize the immigrant. The end result may be that the immigrant does not return or grows hostile in response to such treatment. A better approach is to assume that each immigrant is capable of understanding our slightest nuances of language. If we are wrong, at least we have shown the individual the respect we would want accorded to ourselves.

15. It is important to understand that many immigrants are afraid of being seen by the INS as “public charges.” Recent immigration law changes have placed even greater penalties on immigrants who have received some form of public assistance while awaiting citizenship. As a result, although “public assistance” is defined very specifically, many immigrants have come to fear approaching any institution for help. They are concerned that by seeking assistance they are creating a record somewhere that will result in additional financial burdens to their immigration sponsors, or to themselves, or will even ruin their chances of becoming citizens. For some immigrants at risk for HIV, the perception is that even seeking prevention assistance can be a problem. Some immigrants with HIV infection are even waiting for a “cure” for HIV rather than risk seeking help now and being seen as a public charge.

16. If an immigrant is undocumented, the AIDS service provider and the immigrant may incorrectly perceive they are ineligible for all services. There is both public and private help available to immigrants regardless of their immigration status. Virtually all prevention services in many states, including New York, are open to everyone regardless of their immigrant status. In addition, many support group and other social services can be offered to undocumented immigrants. Before excluding an immigrant from service or promulgating internal guidelines, check with someone knowledgeable about immigration law for guidance.

17. It is vital to understand the basics of immigration law to provide effective prevention, housing and social services to immigrants. Recent changes in federal, state and local social welfare and immigration laws have made the lives of many immigrants much more complicated. Because of these changes, for example, some immigrants are eligible for food stamps, and some for housing assistance, while others are not. You should not be advising or assisting immigrants with their benefits eligibility questions unless you have received training about the recent legal changes on these issues. While no one should expect you to become an immigration law expert, it is important that you be able to spot issues and seek additional advice. As long as you can identify issues of concern and know “what you do not know” you should be able to assist immigrants with HIV in securing needed benefits.

18. Requiring immigrants to discuss their HIV or immigration status in an open setting violates their privacy. Many immigrants have reported being asked about their HIV status and their immigration information in a crowded, open office. While most AIDS service and health care providers are crowded for space, it is important that there be a private room in which to ask such sensitive questions, if they must be asked. Keep in mind that for an immigrant to admit that (s)he is illegal and HIV+ is extremely sensitive and, in some cases, can be the same as admitting to having violated the law.

19. When attempting to recruit immigrants for different programs, specifically mention that immigrants are welcome. Simply adding the word “immigrants welcome” to your literature and materials can do an immense amount to make the immigrant community feel welcome.

20. When planning public education programs, remember that in some immigrant communities there is a stigma in being associated with anything involved with HIV/AIDS. Frequently, AIDS service organizations will sponsor an HIV/AIDS prevention seminar for an immigrant audience and then express surprise that so few people attend. One reason for the poor attendance may be the manner in which the education is being promoted. For many immigrants, there is stigma in attending a health education event associated solely with HIV/AIDS. The implication is that if you attend such an event people will think you have HIV or that someone in your family is a drug user, sex worker or homosexual. To overcome this stigma, it is often easier to broaden the theme of the event to include other health issues. Another item on the agenda might offer an additional level of comfort to the general community and may enhance immigrant participation.

21. The terms, “gay”, “lesbian” and “bisexual” are social constructs that may not be applicable to men and women from different countries. In many countries, there is a wide diversity of terms that are used to define men and women who have sex with the same gender. While the term “gay” is increasingly used, it is far from a universally accepted term. In most countries, many people who have sex with a person of the same gender are reluctant to publicly identify with gay-related groups. When dealing with immigrants, it is important to be flexible in the terminology you use. One recommendation is to avoid the use of the terms “gay,” “lesbian” or “bisexual” until the immigrant, man or woman, introduces the term into the conversation.

22. Create opportunities for immigrants of similar backgrounds to talk with each other. Many immigrants with HIV are isolated. Disconnected from their home countries and often estranged from AIDS service providers, they cling to a small network of friends for support. One important role a social service provider can play is to bring these individuals together and give them an opportunity to address their problems as a group. Providing immigrants an opportunity to discuss their own situations and develop responses in a group setting helps empower the community.

23. Remember that you are a service provider concerned with the welfare of your clients. Unless you are otherwise notified by your employer, your responsibilities do not include reporting undocumented immigrants to the INS. In fact, some advocates assert that it is the responsibility of providers to protect the status of immigrants whenever legally permissible. When a single service provider takes it upon itself to act as an INS agent, all programs suffer in lost clients and shattered trust.

24. Immigrant-friendly means using language that respects the humanity of the immigrant. While everyone has grown weary of feeling compelled to use “politically correct” language, the truth is that words can hurt. It is easy to use terminology that does not offend. For immigrants, the word “illegal” usually raises hackles because it indicates that the speaker thinks the person is only a walking violation of the law and that (s)he does not see him or her as a human being. In addition, the term “illegal” is typically wrongly applied because the person using the word does not understand the immigrant’s legal status. A preferable term is “undocumented” because it means the person simply lacks the proper immigration papers.

25. Immigrants come in both genders, all races and ethnic backgrounds, sexual orientations and with a multiplicity of languages. If you harbor any racist, sexist or homophobic attitudes, you should either not work with immigrants or learn to set aside those attitudes when entering your workplace.

Glossary of Immigrant Terms and List of Laws Affecting HIV+ Immigrants²

Quick Reference Glossary of Important Immigration Terms

Citizen (USC): person born in the United States, a U.S. territory or abroad to citizen parents.

Naturalized Citizen (USC): person born outside the U.S. who applies for citizenship by fulfilling certain requirements. The person applying for citizenship must show that (s)he is at least 18 years of age, has been a legal permanent resident and resided in the U.S. continuously for the last five years, has good moral character and a basic knowledge of the English language and U.S. history, and be willing to take an oath of allegiance to the United States.

Legal Permanent Resident (LPR): Commonly referred to as “green” card holders, persons who have been granted permission to stay in the U.S. indefinitely as residents.

Refugees/Asylees: person who flees his or her country of origin due to a well-founded fear of persecution based on religion, race, political opinion, nationality or membership in a particular social group. Refugees apply for this protection abroad. Asylees apply for this status once they are in the U.S.

Withholding of Removal: permission granted during removal (deportation) proceedings to immigrants who can demonstrate a substantial threat to life or liberty if returned to their country of origin.

Cuban and Haitian entrant: In general, refers to Cuban and Haitian arrivals who, in 1980, were given permission to enter the Country and obtain employment authorization and public assistance. For the purposes of eligibility under welfare “reform”, the term is applied to Cubans and Haitians who have been granted special status as entrants, those applying for asylum, those granted parole or those in removal proceedings.

Parolee: person allowed to enter the Country for humanitarian, legal or medical reasons, who is granted Parolee status for a certain amount of time during which (s)he has legal permission to reside in the Country. This type of permission is discretionary.

PRUCOL: acronym for Permanently Residing under Color of Law. PRUCOL is not an immigration status. It is a public benefits determination. It implies that an immigrant is in the Country with some type of permission, since the immigrant is both known to the INS and the INS has not moved to deport him or her. Examples of immigrants considered PRUCOL include asylum applicants, adjustment of status applicants and persons granted extended voluntary departure. PRUCOL has been interpreted differently by different public assistance programs.

Diversity Visa Lottery: 55,000 visas allotted annually to persons from countries with low admission rates to the U.S. A person who applies for the lottery must meet the Country's eligibility requirements as well as the education or work experience requirements. An immigrant who "wins" the lottery wins the chance to apply for a "green" card. (S)he does not "win" a "green" card. The "winners" of the lottery are selected at random. The information from non-winners is destroyed annually. Only one application per immigrant is accepted by the Department of State; otherwise, the immigrant is automatically disqualified.
